The CGS Annual Meeting convenes over 650 high-influence representatives of CGS member institutions, organizations that serve graduate schools, and other thought leaders in the field.

Most attendees are graduate deans (~39%), senior university decision-makers with authority in admissions, benchmarking, curriculum, learning assessment, and online education. Approximately 37% of CGS Annual Meeting attendees are assistant or associate deans. Approximately 24% of CGS Annual Meeting attendees serve some other university role such as director of admissions, director of diversity, or director of graduate studies in a department or are employed by a non-university organization.

The 2019 CGS Annual Meeting attracted attendees from 50 states, Puerto Rico, and the District of Columbia, 11 countries, 300+ universities, 30 other organizations, companies, and federal agencies.

The CGS Annual Meeting is simply the most important professional meeting for leaders of graduate education in the U.S. It helps me and my leadership team shape our graduate school’s agenda for the year ahead.

Most everybody we spoke with at the CGS Annual Meeting was a decision-maker. My colleagues and I agreed it was the best conference we have attended in 5 years, and CGS made everything easy for us. Kudos!
