Understanding the Impact of International Graduate Experiences

Diana B. Carlin, Saint Louis University
Karen DePauw, Virginia Tech
Brian S. Mitchell, Council of Graduate Schools
Henning Schroeder, University of Minnesota
CGS Annual Meeting, December 3, 2015
Overview

- The Whys of Graduate International Experiences
- The Ways of Graduate International Experiences
- The Role of Graduate Administrators
- The Impacts of Graduate International Experiences
The Whys – student focus

- Increased international research collaborations
- Increased research topics with a global focus
- Greater diversity on campuses
- Most campuses have global mission statements
- Opportunities for employment outside the U.S.
The Ways – student focus

- Joint and Dual Degrees
- Graduate certificates – international research
- Research abroad
- Study abroad
- International campuses
- International conference presentations
- Virtual interactions
- International internships/practica
- Curriculum on campus; globalization at home
The Role of Graduate Administrators

- Cross institutional boundaries to create opportunities
- Lead programs
- Assist with approval of globally oriented degree programs
- Assist with development and approval of joint and dual degree programs
- Assist with research support
- Provide conference support
The Impacts

- On the students
- On the institution
- On undergraduate students
- On research
- On international students’ home countries