Max Voegler was appointed Director of the DFG’s North America Office in October 2010. He joined the DFG in 2005 as a program officer in the Academic Libraries and Information Systems division, where he coordinated policy among European research funding organizations in the fields of Information and Communication Technology. In 2009, he moved to the International Affairs division to head the section on North America and Research Marketing.

As director of the DFG’s North American Office in Washington DC, Dr. Voegler facilitates contact between scientists and researchers in Germany and North America and, together with the DFG office in New York, organizes outreach activities to showcase German research in the region. The Washington office also functions as a first point of contact between North American funding agencies and the DFG’s head office in Bonn. Dr. Voegler holds a PhD in European history from Columbia University.
